[7:10 PM, 7/1/2021] Anne Campbell: I am always saddened that the copy of Exotica-expensive reference book on tropical plants (which I lusted after as student) which was housed in the chicken wire cabinet for reference books in the old library would have been devoured by earwigs damp and mould Guess now the building will be a digital library! [7:14 PM, 7/1/2021] Anne Campbell: Yes you can - as student in UK I went to largest bookshop - Foyles couldn't afford it. Then as an adult it had gone digital with a subscription!!

[7:14 PM, 7/1/2021] Susan Mains: Wonderful memory... and sad as well

[7:17 PM, 7/1/2021] Anne Campbell: Yep- Denis Noel had a copy- guess he got that with all his Agricultural degrees. Wonderful breeze in the afternoon -cool and dim-students used to study there - kids reading room downstairs

[7:18 PM, 7/1/2021] Anne Campbell: Building blocks supposedly from part of Fort Frederick walls. Yes you can.

[7:18 PM, 7/1/2021] Susan Mains: You mean the stones to actually make the structure?????

[7:19 PM, 7/1/2021] Anne Campbell: I was told so check the curved bit by the museum which trucks damaged

[7:21 PM, 7/1/2021] Anne Campbell: Going around the building to the tunnel. Not sure if its fact but Forts ramparts? damaged - always been like that

[7:22 PM, 7/1/2021] Anne Campbell: The quiet atmosphere of empty carenage in afternoon still the same [7:23 PM, 7/1/2021] Anne Campbell: Quiet

[7:23 PM, 7/1/2021] Anne Campbell: That shady side

[7:23 PM, 7/1/2021] Susan Mains: It is. I simply love it

[7:25 PM, 7/1/2021] Anne Campbell: As kids that was a great walk with my cousins who lived in Church street Fort bandstand too

I remember a time when two or three red telephone boxes stood as upright and stiff as the Queen's guards on the carenage.....Redder than the colourful ladies in red with red stiletto heels and cherry red pouting lips..Gleaming...as honking red cars passed by. —Debbie
